

Hi! This is Janet, coming to you from my lovely writing closet – or office, though there's no desk, so it's hard to call it an office.

Today instead of a regular blog post, I want to tell you about my new online community, which I'm really excited about.

The Magical Moms Club is a place to help find a balance between the mundane and magical.

A place where we know our children believe in magic, and where we expect that rather than try to quash it.

A place to find ways to help strengthen your own divine connection.

A place to discuss and share ideas for building more spiritual work into your day to day family life and to support each other in helping our kids grow their own divine connections.

A place where seasonal celebrations and full moon ideas for all ages are plentiful.

I'm sure you're thinking that sounds lovely, but really, what do you get?

For starters, you'll be invited to a private group on facebook for members where we discuss spirituality, family, and how they intersect

You'll get access to free PDFs of many craft ideas and courses, and workshop outlines (set up so you can give the workshop yourself!), special discounts and sneak peeks of works in progress and upcoming projects, and probably other nifty things too as I realize they exist.

The Magical Moms Club is in a beta roll out period right now, to make sure I've worked out all the details. Until March first 2015, get a year's membership free! Click on the Community link at the top of my website and sign up now!

After your year is up, pay just $5 a month or $50 a year.
